

You have gotten by on natural ability for most of your life. Some people are naturally good at things, but very few are naturally great.

Surprise! You are neither, and very soon everyone is going to be as smart or smarter than you. Askuys (u)-way you are going to be successful. Also, if law school and practice for three years, it would make life much easier on the both of us

The ability to create and problem enough, but the days when you have the opportunity to look at a problem, take a step back, and come up with an unexpected solution that actually makes a lot of sense—those are good days.

Thoughtful people. Anyone can be reactionary in the moment. But when someone has obviously sat down, taken some time, and thought about something—whether they reveal that to me through compliment, criticism, gesture, whatever—that's really meaningful to me.
